Art Basel (<https://www.artnews.com/t/art-basel/>) has announced the 289 galleries that will take part in its upcoming edition in the Swiss city, which is scheduled to run June 16 to June 19, with preview days on June 14 and June 15.

Though it is not the first edition in Basel to be staged since the onset of the pandemic, this iteration will be the first to take place during Art Basel's traditional mid-June dates. Last year's edition was delayed until September, but included a similar number of galleries.

Several of the world's top galleries, including Gagosian, Hauser & Wirth, Pace, and David Zwirner, are set to participate alongside 19 first-time exhibitors. Those making their Art Basel debut include two galleries based in Africa, Jahmek Contemporary Art from Luanda and OH Gallery from Dakar. Also among the first-timers are Proyectos Ultravioleta in Guatemala City, Mariane Ibrahim in Chicago and Paris, and Athr Gallery, which has three locations in Saudi Arabia.

One major change to the selection for galleries, first instituted for Art Basel's Miami Beach fair last December, is that it relaxed "the minimum number of exhibitions a gallery must hold per year, the need to have a permanent exhibition space, and the number of years the gallery must have been in operation," according to a press release. The move was in part meant to diversify the exhibitor list.

Another change this year comes in the fair's Unlimited section, which focuses on large-scale artworks. That section opens the day before the main fair as a preview. For this edition, the section, organized by Giovanni Carmine, the director of the Kunst Halle Sankt Gallen in Switzerland, will now also include a dedicated "Unlimited Night" on Thursday, June 16. The fair will also continue to host an online viewing room in tandem with the physical fair.

In a statement, Art Basel's global director Marc Spiegler said, "We are looking forward to staging Art Basel's first June show since 2019, especially with such a strong line-up of galleries, including the return of many who were forced by the pandemic to take a hiatus last year. This year's quality and breadth of material will be on par with previous editions of our show—yet more diverse than ever before in terms of the galleries participating."
